

David
Hayes-Bautista,
Director, Center for the Study of Latino
Health and Culture

May 5
12 to 1pm
Lobby 1
Franklin Building

While many believe that May 5 is Mexican Independence Day, that day is actually celebrated on Sept. 16, the day in 1810 when Mexico revolted against Spanish forces.

Then what is Cinco de Mayo all about? Find out more about this distinctively American holiday from UCLA's David Hayes-Bautista.

Hayes-Bautista is Professor of Medicine and Director of the Center for the Study of Latino Health and Culture at UCLA's David Geffen School of Medicine. He will speak about his book, El Cinco de Mayo: An American Tradition, which explores the traditions behind the holiday.

With an undergraduate degree from UC Berkeley and a master's and Ph.D. in medical sociology from UCSF, Hayes-Bautista focuses his research on the dynamics of Latino health.

The event, sponsored by UCOP's Latino Staff Association (LaSA), will feature light refreshments and a donation box for the LaSA scholarship fund for underprivileged Latino students. A donation enters you in a drawing to win Hayes-Bautista's book.
